New City Trolley System Proposed

Jun 10, 2005 2:00 pm US/Eastern

Baltimore, MD. (AP) It's been decades since Baltimore had a trolley line, but there's talk about creating a new trolley system to draw tourists to neighborhoods that aren't in easy walking distance from the Inner Harbor.

The Charles Street Development Corporation is looking at creating a trolley line linking Johns Hopkins University to the harbor -- a distance of more than seven miles.

The hope is that tourists would use it to travel to Mount Vernon and the arts district.

The group says building the trolley line could cost from $40 to $150 million.
